I was a victim of the bystander effect. I'm a veteran, bought in on the sneeze 84 years ago in Jan 2021. I had only DRS'd about 20% of my GME shortly after DRS was discovered because I trusted my broker to (maybe) do the right thing and actually go and buy my shares.

But after seeing the sheer number of screenshots of conversations with brokers regarding the splivy and everyone having a multitude of different answers over the last few days, I pulled the trigger. Clearly no one can get their answers straight on something that should be so simple, so routine. So how can I believe they are going to properly handle it when this bitch takes off for Alpha Centauri.

Just initiated 100% DRS out of my maple syrup savings account and into the purple circle! XXX shares about to be ripped out of the DTC and on their way to CS to join the others!

For anyone still holding in a broker and on the fence about doing it, you will definitely feel alot better about the investment if you know you actually own those shares. Id rather be taxed on my gains on the way to andromeda than have my broker stop me from being able to get on the rocket in the first place.

Gonna pour myself a glass of bourbon now and sleep peacefully tonight (and not because of the bourbon). Cheers to the revolution, and cheers to all of you! Obligatory ■■■■■■■■. See you all at the other side of the galaxy.
