In an interview with Thomas Peterffy, the founder, chairman, and largest shareholder of Interactive brokers, Peterffy spoke in explicit detail on how close the market was to collapse in January.

I almost didn't watch it because it looked like the interview he did on CNBC. But it's not...it's a different one. I honestly don't know when it was put out or what station it's with because there is no logo, but it holds all the answers we've been searching for this whole time.

In the interview, Peterffy explains that in January the squeeze almost occurred because...

 - There were 50 million shares registered at the same time. **

 - There were 70 million shares short. **

 - And there were 150 million shares short in call options. **

Yes, Peterffy told us where the naked shorts were hiding and said if longs exercised their options, shorts would have had to deliver 270 MILLION shares, while only 50 million shares exist in the market.

He also mentioned in his interview that if we knew we had the right to ask for our shares, as in REGISTER THEM, we could have easily caused the squeeze.

So, by those calculations... In January the short interest was 550%. Also, I don't believe the FTDs are included in those 270 million shares either.

That's it. That's the whole puzzle...solved. I just hope everyone is buckled up.

TL;DR: The short interest for GameStop was 550%, based on the details Thomas Peterffy gave in an interview.
