I honestly believe a lot of FUD has been floating around recently. Ginger kid making 100M. Citadel and Susquehanna being long on Towel stock which influenced Cohen to sell? Citadel and Susquehanna had like 7M shares total which is a drop in the ocean for them so clearly this FUD is irrational. Dr. Trimbath spoke her infinite wisdom to DRS the shares to get the out of the DTC. Honestly, in my mind, everything else is noise other than DRS the float for GME.

Last week, Ryan Cohen literally just proved by selling towel stock that there is no such thing as retail price discovery. How do you sell $175M and 10% of a publicly traded company with the ticker absolutely ripping thereafter. Shouldn't the price drop if THAT much liquidity was dumped into the market?!? If price discovery was actually real, then the stock should have went down on the 16th. If that BS article about that Ginger kid selling 5% of towel stock is true, then 15% of the entire float was sold the 16th and 17th. In simple economics, with that much supply thrown into the market on those days, if true price discovery was real, then the towel stock should have gotten hammered on the 16th and 17th with that much supply released in the market.

In addition, Cohen highlighted again how little financial analysts and media truly knows. They were ALL saying how his recent purchase of these shares (despite buying in March'22) were a signal of a pump & dump. Some hedge fund even filed with the SEC that he should be looked into. How crazy is it that Wall Street villainized Cohen of running the stock up by buying when he was selling the entire time?!? All of the media just got clowned yet again. ■

What is great about the GME shares is that it's also a beautiful long-term play. No other meme stock is a long term play. The only play is a squeeze play for the other meme stocks. However, in addition to the long-term play, GME is also light years ahead of all other tickers with the pressure cooker known as "DRS the Float". Anyone above an IQ of 75 could see GME has greater potential than every other meme stock in the short play as well as long term play. We may be retarded, but we ain't stupid. (Also not financial advice.)
