I have lost a good bit of faith in the integrity of the U.S. capital markets. And that is an extraordinary thing for me to state publicly.

Over a legal practice spanning 27 years as a U.S. capital markets & securities lawyer at some of the largest and most prestigious law firms in the world as well as at my own current independent practice, I NEVER thought I would reach this conclusion at the age of 51.

I am now convinced that large swathes of the U.S. equity capital markets are rigged and heavily manipulated against retail individual investors by some of the largest institutions who are entrusted (ill-advisedly) with the smooth functioning of the markets and by a slew of very large, very powerful hedge funds whose insatiable greed and ability to illegally manipulate the equity markets in broad daylight (and in dark pools) is astonishing — as it is deeply disgusting.

The SEC, for whom I have abiding respect, appears to be unwilling or incapable of taking “real time” action to counter these blatant manipulative activities which millions of unwashed “apes” — so-called dumb money — have exposed over the last several months of the GameStop and AMC sagas.
