Listen up Apes/Slugs, I am double wrapped in military grade tinfoil tonight. Buckle up, you are about to go on a journey. Whether this is a Shitpost or DD is still unclear. Enjoy.

This DEFINITELY is not financial advice

60 days has come and gone since CNBC reported about the infamous Wu-Tang clan album "Once Upon A Time In Shaolin" (CNBC Article), and we still don't know who the album's mysterious buyer is. For those who don't know this exclusive work of art was purchased by an unknown company for an undisclosed amount that settled the $7.4 million dollar forfeiture judgement stemming from Martin Shkreli's securities fraud case.

Why hasn't the Once Upon A Time In Shaolin buyer identified themselves as announced by their attorney

"is going to identify themselves in the future, I'd say in the next 30-60 days", Peter Scoolidge

Well, as it turns out I think they may be dropping hints...

***60 Days After the Announcement that the albums buyer would identify themselves***

When I first saw these tweets I thought to myself, they seem like song lyrics, and I googled them to no avail. Last night it clicked...Maybe they ARE song lyrics, to an album so exclusive that only a handful of people in the world have ever heard it. And that only the new album's owner would know.

Gamestop? No way, no way,....I mean maybe...Can't be right? But even if true then why?

Now that you mention it, if I read the lines in those tweets as if they were coming out of say...I don't know, Method Man's mouth? Could I see it? Maybe.

So now you might think to yourself, I can see it, but its a bit of a stretch. Let me hit you with my answer to why.

* "Once Upon A Time In Shaolin" would be the perfect creative masterpiece to mint into a locked content

NFT dividend. Peter Scoolidge stated 2 things of note. 1.) "Anyone who buys this album is restricted. Nobody can commercially release it. Contrary to some early reports, it can't be given away for free". 2.) He stated that the buyer is an entity and not an individual.

* Well technically if Gamestop bought it, then distributing to shareholders as a dividend wouldn't be giving it away...technically shareholders bought it...it is theirs.

* The album can't be released to the public for free. Which is no problem for a locked content NFT dividend. The content will be unlocked in 88 years (the year 2103 according to the albums legal stipulations). No music would have to be released.

* $7.4 million would be a small price to pay for a unique NFT dividend connected to an album that can't be monetized until the year 2103 (For why this is important reference the Overstock Digital Dividend). Synthetically hedged shorts would have to pay this dividend but how would they be able to determine a cash equivalent value in the event that more shares were in circulation than actually exist. How much is the Wu-Tang album worth from a commercial standpoint right now...and for the next 88 years....$0.

* (Edit for above: $7.4 million was the total amount of Shkreli's judgement so the album could have been bought for less)

* Gamestop is most certainly an entity and not an individual.

* I also find it interesting the albums leather bound book of lyrics has 174 pages....those numbers look familiar to any apes lol. As well as the $7.4 million owed by Shkreli under the judgement.

Welcome to my psychotic TED talk

EDIT: I wrote this thing in a hurry not expecting much attention. I cleaned it up a bit.

In addition one other addition.

If Ryan Cohen negotiated to buy this album from Shkreli's seized assets the process could have started in DC right?
