

Title: What Really Happened last week

Author: gilogravo

Created 2022-01-08 16:57:26 UTC

Permalink: /r/GME/comments/rz4a0e/what_really_happened_last_week/

Url: https://www.reddit.com/r/GME/comments/rz4a0e/what\_really\_happened\_last\_week/

This is going to be very basic. Please comment with improvements. Here's what really happened last week.

From Monday to Thursday price was manipulated down from 157 to a low of 121. This 3 day long slow laborious drop was intended to shake out paperhands and anyone stupid enough to be margin trading and using leverage.

Then, boom, Thursday night, after market has closed, FAKE NEWS hits. Suddenly all the major media outlets are saying that there is this huge news, huge secrets released and Cramers brilliant business plan was correct! GameStop will be opening an NFT marketplace!! Price spikes 30% and hits 170 ish. The media say it must be us retail buyers who were responsible!

The unfortunate truth is that retail buyers were not able to buy as the market was closed. Plus, everyone knows that day to day retail buyers do not move markets, hedge funds and institutions do.

The other major unfortunate truth is that we all already know about GameStop and their NFT plans. Everyone does. It's not news. There was in fact NO OFFICIAL NEWS from GameStop last week. And of course, in no way was it "cramers ideo". Haha. He is a coke snorting circus sideshow who's only job is to mislead the public to maximise Wall Street profits.

Next day, Friday, and the media hype is in full swing. The question is did they manage to get a load of new people to start buying on Friday? If they did then fine, that's great, those new buyers will hopefully look further than the mainstream media for information about their investment and realise they have purchased a unique opportunity, and if they hold they will be part of the MOASS.

However, Friday then proves the mainstream medias role and the final part of the plan for the entire week.... We see GameStop price pushed right down to 132. How many day traders and leverage margin traders and punters who have done no research, did they ruin with that move? How many weak paperhands did they push to sell? How many people did they make feel that their faith in GameStop is misplaced? The answer is "some"....relatively very few.

So, in summary, it's very easy to analyse the week and it's a huge indicator for us. It stinks of desperation. The kind of desperation we saw last January. Even with the new JP Morgan ETF for "meme stocks" which laughingly includes Robinhood, they seem to be really running out of time and options.

Side note: the fact that they included robinhood alongside GameStop in their new ETF means that GameStop shareholders are in a way compensating robinhood losses. JP Morgan and Citadel thinks this is fair. Gary Genzler has said nothing about it so he clearly thinks it's fine too. It's not. It's appallingly crooked, corrupt, fraudulent and wrong.

When they opened up this new ETF I did some rough sums and I think the GameStop "elastic band" at full stretch is $108. I obviously can't in any way guarantee it will go there or for how long. It could gradually get there over weeks or it could spike down and then start the MOASS in minutes. It all depends on who presses the button, who makes the call and who folds their cards first. (Gary genzler? Jamie Dimon? Ken Griffin?)

One thing is very clear to me. GameStop investors all over the world continue to buy and hold and are extremely positive and faithful with their investment. It's become religious. The longer this continues the more fanatical we become. The longer it continues the more time we have to buy. The lower and slower the price moves, the more opportunity we are given.

In fact there is NOTHING that Gary, Jamie or Ken can do to help themselves without making market fraud a bigger headline and without making this a More expensive problem.

Last week's antics prove that their mainstream media tricks don't work anymore. If they aren't careful all investors across all markets will wake up to their fraud.

Best idea is they rip this bandaid off quickly and distract all us Apes by letting us have our wealth. We worked out the game and we have won without cheating. They need to pay out.