So I'm looking for someone to share their wrinkles (because I'm pretty smooth brained) about something I've been thinking about.

So CS gave all those GME shares to the DTCC to distribute but they never did. They just kept them and told all brokers to do a forward split. This basically triples the number of synthetics out there in one step.

The part i haven't heard much about is what the DTCC intends to do with the shares they pocketed.

What stops them from giving the shares (yes giving) to the shitheads like citadel that are all massively short? If they gave them to the hedgies on the down low, the hedgies could use them to close their most toxic shorts (the ones that break even at around $6) and unload a massive fucking bomb they've been sitting on. I know that doesn't probably cover all their shorts but there are probably shorts that break even closer to $25 to $30. And if that's the case, can't they just let the price run up, then short a bunch of shares at like $45, knocking the price back down into the low $30's or mid $20's where they buy back (close those shorts), make a profit and then use that to close their next most toxic shorts and so on. Rinse and Repeat until your able to average up your close price to near what the actual price is.. and you take a small loss closing out of your last shorts but nothing catastrophic. No squeeze happens, and now there's a truckload of synthetics out there that weren't created by naked shorting thanks to the DTCC and so they never need to be bought back. We lock the float with DRS and nothing happens other than we prove lots of illegal fuckery but we already know that and the SEC isn't going to enforce shit so .. we're all left with just our DRS'd shares and nothing else. (I like the stonk so I'm glad I'd have them but still)

In my mind this whole thing since the beginning has been anchored by the fact that every shorted share would eventually need to be purchased back.. but now the DTCC has all those shares they never distributed, probably hundreds of millions, that were never purchased, and can be used to give back to the lenders and it would cost them nothing to do it and much of their short position would be closed.

So I'm hoping someone can explain to me how this can't be a thing. I want this to not be possible but i wouldn't put this kind of desperate criminal activity past the DTCC/SEC/Hedgies and anyone else that stands to gain from it. So aside from "that's illegal!" I'm hoping some of you more wrinkly brained apes can tell me how this isn't possible and a squeeze is untouchable.

Someone tell me this isn't possible..

Edit: werds mean things... so using the right terminology for clarity

Edit 2: fixing mistake...
