I understand the basic concept of what is going on with GME currently, regarding shorting the stock, borrowing syntactic shares, DRS, and the likes.

And although I understand the basic concept, what I don't understand (have the ability to read) are the graphs, and documents, people post about showing/discussing "short interest".

When people discuss short interest of a stock I'm not totally sure what is begin said. And if someone was to show me these documents, or graphs, and asked me to draw my own conclusion from the information. I don't think I could extract much useful information. I studied business so I understand how a graph works haha I'm just not sure what I'm looking at with these type of graphs.

I'd like to be able to look at graphs and documents, understand the information on the page, and then determine a suitable course of action regarding a given stock.

I've blindly followed the APES until this point. And continue to blindly follow I shall! But I'd like to become a more useful APE and be able to do some more in-depth research on other stocks. My GME shepherds have my trust, but I'd like to be educated so I can analyze other stocks short interest that may be diddled by the hedgies, and perhaps become a shepherd for newer APES to follow.

If anyone has any video or text links that may educate me more on this aspect of the stock market it would be much appreciated ■

Thank you.
