New apes, investors, and splitivend seekers, here are some points regarding GameStop that are often overlooked or taken for granted. Going to be a fun week!

Leadership team left high paying, secure jobs at other tech companies to join GameStop. And their pay is now mainly in shares. That exudes confidence in the company.

$100mil cash on hand for stock buybacks, meaning there is a hard nonzero floor on GME price and bankruptcy is impossible.

Funds shorted GameStop believing it would go bankrupt and they'd pay no taxes on their filthy lucre. Then RC joined the show. GameStop now has over a billion dollars on hand, plus nearly a billion in inventory. And a leadership team that believes actions speak louder than words.

SI calculation changed literally overnight last year, so current SI percents are not accurate when compared to previous SI.

Funds hunt stop losses, causing additional downward pressure. Please don't use them.

Multiple tricks are being used to short $GME and hide actual SI, including swaps, dark pool, off exchange, and ETF baskets.

DRS numbers are increasing. Media doesn't discuss this at all, which is strange as it is an uncommon approach and you'd think they'd discuss it.

TL;DR Buy, hold, register, shop GameStop.

Note: This is an updated list incorporating feedback from other apes and investors. Thanks to those who contributed!
