\*\*rewording and reposting here since the SS thread has become a forum slide and was snuffed in new. Removed the shilly pickle, but if you want the tinfoil find the SS thread. DDintoGME removed my post twice for bullshit reasons both times and refuse to respond to modmail\*\*

According to the HBO mini-docu-series and even the Citadel website, 99% of options trades are routed through Citadel. Interestingly enough, the Citadel website denotes there is a source, but the source is not listed. If this is true, then the crazy high options chain in Jan '21 was either i) delta hedged properly and they paid out big time on fulfilling contracts, or ii) they didn't delta hedge properly and they lost tons of money trying to fulfil contracts. Also, depending on how illiquid GME was at the time, naked shorts could have been created to fulfil contracts.

Does anybody know how to find the options chain from January/February of last year?

This is market maker activity, right? So then looking at the quarterly statements from Q4 2020 and Q1 2021 should show Citadel's Market Maker account losing lots of money and/or shares of GME in Q1 2021 as they scrambled to fulfil options contracts. If not here, then where will the evidence be? It's possibly hidden in the shitbonds they offered around that time, but how do I prove it? Swaps?

How is one participant supposed to buy all the shares of approx 99% of the exercised contracts of an illiquid stock? This seems to have been a huge weak spot for them in the Jan sneeze. Such a weak spot may be hidden in swaps or bonds maybe both. Also increased failures-to-deliver or any signs of naked shorts during this time could indicate there was not enough liquidity to exercise contracts and the game was over.

I seem to be getting huge resistance on this and IDK why. I saw something in the documentary I want to research more about. Please only comment relevant and helpful information.
