The second scenario is when all the participants race to be the first out when buying back FTDs. I don't imagine this has ever happened before or won't this time because...there are way too many FTDs.

If Gamestop has been getting shorted since 2012-2013, there are a shit ton of FTDs out there. Your guess is as good as mine. The volume since 2013 overall in GME is roughly 10.5 Billion shares traded and that is about 110 million shares per month. That's a shit ton for an 8 year monthly average.

Another stock has had 31 Billion volume since 2017 averaging 530 million volume per month....outrageous....and the funny thing is... they only had 22-50 million shares outstanding most of that time. Good thing for the other stock, they sold more shares to keep themselves open to battle these guys in court.

Don't let anyone try to divide retail up by saying "I have this stock, or I have that stock, and I don't like research because you mentioned their stock". Grow up, this is about all of Retail, not just YOU.

We have the same enemy. ALL RETAIL SHAREHOLDERS OF ALL STOCKS have been preyed on

These FTDs exist Market Wide Who Knows how old... "archaic" is mentioned more than once

This thing with the FTDs is quite important. A lot of people have spoken about it that WE deeply researched investors, know of, but not the average individual. There are a lot of us who really are starting to understand that, as u/Atobitt said "this is a 50 year ripple effect" due to the nature of taking everything you can...eventually, no matter how you write the equation, the money runs out to steal.

The market is established for fraud to flourish using FTDs

There seems to be a history of regulatory agencies and bodies avoiding the issue of the fraud being committed in the stock market. There are many complaints and the SEC seems to do nothing. If they put a new rule in place...it has a new loophole. And that's the endless game you play at the SEC. They protect the financial institutions that are apart the pay to play schemes. There are a lot of players in this club, and we're not invited.

If you haven't caught up on it see how naked selling is a very old technique of theft.

Mississippi Bubble, South Sea Bubble, Tulip Bubble, and then see what happen in newspapers right before the 1929 crash October 24th.

Jim Decosta Outlines How this Done, but before I get into that.. here's how you can help me dig through this SEC archive and on their site and I search like this:

So back to Jim Decosta in this recorded comment to the SEC chair..I believe. This particular comment is 142 pages long. It's extremely detailed in the process of hiding FTD's. Jim even explains how they were able to obtain accurate Fails numbers.

There is A LOT more to read on this than I can post in images.

I can go on and on and on about this but Jim really states it so much better than I can. What I think is important is that these documents be seen as much as possible. The information inside these letters and comments to the SEC already has the evidence of the crimes from years before and nothing has changed for the criminals since then. I think it's coming very soon... as soon as something so big happens it forces their hand.

Edit: 2016 comment to SEC about synthetic shorts being unlimited.<https://www.sec.gov/comments/s7-21-16/s72116-6.pdf>

Short sales with unlimited supplies of synthetic securities borne from sham transactions do not contribute to the underlying fundamentals of the economic system*, which; a) cause inaccurate reporting to the marketplace, investors and regulators, and b) raise the probability of systemic risk from over-leveraging, which impedes assets segregated under consumer protection regulations and the fundamental underlying net capital that supports a firm's financial stability.

■ Ex-cleared transactions (trades not sent to the national clearance and settlement system, including pre-netted, compressed, summarized and internalized trades) have become a detrimental loophole in the national clearance and settlement system that can affect the real net capital of a firm (causing inaccurate reporting) and/or the segregation of securities for the protection of investors. The mounting number and value of ex-cleared trades could produce systemic risk for the settlement system

PSA- only b*t accounts say "cumulative" or "aggregate" when talking about FTDs

Let's have a quick heart to heart.

Computershare is the way. DRS is our only logical means of supplying ourself with one course of Remedy...one of them

That being said, it's time to put a magnifying glass on these FTDs and FTRs Fails to Receive. All of retail trading is infected with FTDs and naked selling of securities. How else would predatory shorters stay afloat without naked selling? We KNOW of 192 million recorded FTDs of GME since 2014...what we dont know is how many FTDs exist just from naked selling securities to unknowing retail investors...
