It seems that bit by bit the narrative of the "analysts" is changing.

Only several months ago it was all about how GME is a failing/doomed retail company. This was the mantra for several months, which now is shifting from retail to possible, but very risky investment.

"GameStop more like a venture capital investment, one that could branch out into non-fungible tokens, cryptocurrencies, or other businesses. But it's also a very risky investment."

This reminds me all the Tesla haters, who just couldn't keep up with the company's revenue growth...
