

Title: I think I found a shadow Accomplice of Citadel's NFT market plans.

Author: Matador3364

Created 2022-02-11 18:26:45 UTC

Permalink: /r/DDintoGME/comments/sq628s/i_think_i_found_a_shadow_accomplice_of_citadels/

Url: https://www.reddit.com/r/DDintoGME/comments/sq628s/i_think_i_found_a_shadow_accomplice_of_citadels/

Been awhile since I posted in here, so who those who don't recognize my username, I've gone down a considerable amount of rabbit holes and like to share how the corruption of the stock markets by shorting hedge funds is tied to the corruption of contemporary art and collectible item markets. It's hard to document everything I read, but I found out something that stands out as a little interesting to me.

User Interviews is survey website, mainly used for things like medical research. A post by reddit user Extra_Speed_7645 claimed that User Interviews was looking for people interested in the NFT gaming markets and willing to pay them $80 to talk to them. It is undeniable, by looking at the short history of Extra_Speed_7645's reddit account, that it is only used for marketing purposes.

User Interviews is funded by investment firms that invest in investment firms that invest in investment firms that invest in patent owning business owners that want to start an investment firm (Honestly, the whole structure looks like a giant Ponzi Scheme system that uses shell companies to gain ownership of brand names and patents of upcoming innovators and entrepreneurs, through offering investment support and then demanding ever increasing investor rights).

Just to shine a quick light on one of these investing firms, named Accomplice (I am way to wrinkle brained to make this shit up, that's legitimately their name), we can see that they have an interesting history working with Sequoia. Sequoia of course is now legally and contractually in bed with Citadel. Looking into the history of the investment firms invested in User Interviews, you will see that all of their investments are confusingly intertwined with each other, as in investment firms that invest in investment firms that invest in the investment firms that invest in them.

I know this is just kind of a tinfoil sounding speculation right now, but there is SO much more I'm seeing with this that I don't have the time to type out fully right now. Just thought I'd share with anyone who was interested in doing their own Due Diligence on the NFT markets, and the companies that will be funding and doing research for the direct competitors of GameStop, et al., in that market arena (which does include Citadel). I am working on trying to paint a deeper DD with this that I might share, but life is weird and time is precious, so other priorities come first for me right now.

Also, I'm a cartoon (for those who know, you know).