

Title: Was Gamestop's Q4 2021 Earnings Call Music Carefully Chosen?

Author: disoriented_llama

Created 2022-03-19 15:22:58 UTC

Permalink: /r/TheGloryHodl/comments/thxgsg/was_gamestops_q4_2021_earnings_call_music/

Url: /r/GME/comments/th3o7y/was_gamestops_q4_2021_earnings_call_music/

Linked Post Content:

Being a classical music fan myself, I wanted to know the name.

The first piece is "O mio babbino caro" by Giacomo Puccini. This translates from Italian to "Oh, my dear papa". It's basically about a whiny girl and a boy she loves, but her papa says no.

Relevant? Maybe, but I expect more from our GME Chessmaster Daddy Cohen.

This piece is part of an opera from 1918 by Giovacchino Forzano called Gianni Schicchi.

A classic story of... FRAUD.

Random Coincidence? Maybe.

Basically it's about a rich old man that is on his death bed and all the vultures around him are only concerned with his will. They find out he left it all to the church and are pissed. Schicchi explains the only people that know he's dead are in this room and if they conspire together, they will all gain significant wealth. Before he disguises himself as the dead man, he reminds them all about the penalty for falsifying a will. None can back out or they will ALL lose their hands for theft and be exiled. They immediately begin to notarize the new will. When the notary arrives, Schicchi gives them all peanuts and changes the will on the fly, giving himself the entire fortune. None of them could say anything because they were all guilty in this conspiracy. Dante then condemns him to hell for his theft.

The bigger criminal will ALWAYS turn on the lesser criminal eventually.