GME ... Threw that tired shit in there to piss some people off @nd get you to read this. Serious question for discussion: at some point won't big institutional investors recall all their loaned out shares and then drs them? I get it, they make shit tones of money loaning them out to short. But, at some point there will be so many drs

that they won't be able to drs all of theirs. Amirite? If we really own multiple times the float then at some point DRS will be the only verifiable shares of actual ownership. I heard all the bs - there is insurance, somebody will have to pay, dtcc, blah blah blah. Note: I also believe that any broker share that does not allow drs (even if not backed by a real share) is just as important as a drs share... so this is not some sell fud bs. But think about it, at some point there can only be actual owners. Everything else by definition is not. Let's say I want a bmw. A guy says I'll sell you one, but when I look at the title it's not. He says "but the guy who sold it to me said it was a bmw, and there is insurance...". At the end of the day, if I really want a bmw I don't give a fuck what he thinks he owns or what it's insured for , cuz I only want a bmw. Amirite? Just thinking out loud here.
