This is not the first time that these sorts of accusations have been levied on the subreddits involving GME. I cannot speak for others, but here's my view on the matter.

In short, I trust none of the anonymous content submitters in this site enough to invest my hard earned money without further personal research. This is nothing against the hard work of those who submit quality DD. However and this is key, I know none of you and do not know your motivations.

If I see information on GME or other investments I would do my own research before investing my money. Therefore this is really no different than any other media source, other than if I saw it on CNBC I would likely research it more as they have proven time and time again that they are little more than the ragged puppet of the rich old white men of Wall Street.

We are not colluding. We are reading, we are contributing, and we are educating ourselves and others. We are surely the most educated and involved investors in any company, and this seems to scare the Wall Street elite.

Good.
