

Title: I've been thinking something similar...worth considering ■

Author: disoriented_llama

Created 2021-07-24 17:38:03 UTC

Permalink: /r/TheGloryHodl/comments/oquj95/ive_been_thinking_something_similarworth/

Url: /r/GMEJungle/comments/oqtlte/my_basic_wrinklefree_summary_of_events_since/

Is_self: False

This entire Saga feels more like a manipulated narrative. We all know governments and financial institutions like to manipulate their stories. Here isn't any different imo.

After the January run up, which was organic and unexpected to main stream Wall Street, Hedgies began to panic to try to find a way to get out of their positions, however they were unable to due to:

1- Cohen bringing GameStop back from the dead with a solid business model. (They aren't getting ran out of business any time soon.)

And

2- The mass social media attention/Reddit investment apes.

At a certain point, Hedgies failed to sabotage the stock after January. January's run up was organic and highly unexpected by many. Stuck in their positions, Hedgies got to the point where they decided rather than closing their shorts and taking massive loss, they would ride the sinking ship because ultimately, if worst comes to worst they BELIEVED they would get a bailout from the Feds as they normally do OR succeed at bankrupting GME somehow. Emphasis on this being what they BELIEVED at first. They thought they might have a chance at being saved so they continued to try to tank gme in whatever way they could.

In comes what we thought was the useless SEC. However negative we may view them, I think there might be a solid chance they are in fact aware of everything and waiting for THEIR OWN specific narrative to play out. We suspect Cohen had some kind of meeting with the SEC so I believe there may be some kind of plan in place. They may have tested the waters in May and June to see if it was Cohen tweets or Apes manipulating, It wasn't. So they moved forward to focus their full attention on Shorters. They know shorters can't get out, so they've just allowed them to continue using their illegal tactics (what have you) to dig their hole deeper.

What I believe is that the SEC has been watching the saga, knowing GME wouldn't be taken out of business (like how the Hedgies wanted).

Now PLOT TWIST- Our hated SEC buddy GG and Regulators have created a handful of new regulations (that seemingly haven't been enforced yet lul). Since the SEC determined that Cohen and Apes weren't to blame, I believe they then decided to focus 100% on Hedgies. These regulations were meant to both fuck over Hedgies and help to contain whatever crash might happen. They want the damage to only be done to the relevant players rather than the entire market. Hedgies DID NOT see this coming. They expected to get saved.

Now SLOWLY the controversies spoken about like gospel here by apes (Naked shorting, dark pools, etc) have made their way into MM. This isn't accidental. SEC wants and needs this information to slowly be leaked to the public.

The narrative is set, the SEC wants the fall guy to be specifically the shorters and their bad market behavior. They have the few interviews on MM to refer back to as proof of who is to blame, they have the protective regulations to protect the market and themselves, and NOW they have our enforcer coming in this week- Sikh whom hopefully will begin enforcing these regulations and hurt the shorters. It's been said here ALOT and I believe it's true, both the SEC and US need to settle this or the US market will look like a joke internationally. That is their stake here.

So basically, the sec has been waiting for THIS narrative to play out.

IT FEELS CLOSE.

Take it or leave it, but my personal view point of this is: seriously, Cohen just needed to bring in the dividend or something already and avoid this narrative bullshit altogether but it seems this is the manner in which she blows.

TI:DR- Besides the January run up and for a few weeks after it, much of what has gone on has been scripted by SEC and partially by shorters. SEC has been waiting to form a full public verifiable picture of who's to blame (shorters), also to pass all the needed regulations to condense the fallout of Moass, and to have the right people hired to finally enforce them, All pieces are coming into play. ■

THIS IS MY FANFICTION. Hell if I know if it's correct, but it what I believe has been going on. Who knows. ■■■■■ I just want my money to buy a trampoline.