Allegation that Ken Griffin Is Running Citadel Connect as a Dark Pool Is Posted on SEC Chair Gensler's Twitter Page

By Pam Martens and Russ Martens: August 9, 2021 - On August 4, the Chairman of the Securities and Exchange Commission, Gary Gensler, sat for an interview on CNBC. During that interview, Gensler mentioned that his Twitter followers were posting comments on his Twitter page about Dark Pools. Specifically, this is what Gensler said: "We are taking a real close look at market structure and I recently started, you know, engaging on Twitter and to some of those Twitter followers that are writing about Dark Pools, we are looking very closely at this market structure that so many of our orders, retail public orders are not going to the lit markets but are going to internalizers, going to wholesalers, were taking the retail public's trades rather than sending them to the stock exchanges." Dark Pools are opaque, thinly regulated trading platforms that function much like private stock exchanges operating inside the ...

Trading Unit of 5-Count Felon JPMorgan Chase Gave 550 Customer Passwords and User Names to an "Active Customer" for More than a Decade; SEC Fines It a Paltry $2.75 Million

By Pam Martens and Russ Martens: August 6, 2021 - When it comes to the top watchdog of trading on Wall Street, the Securities and Exchange Commission (SEC), that dog can't hunt. It's not that the career professionals at the SEC haven't tried to hunt, it's that when they get too close to ensnaring some powerful person on Wall Street, they are told to stand down. Having a Wall Street defense lawyer at the helm of the SEC under both Presidents Obama and Trump certainly hasn't helped the matter. (See here and here.) The jury is still out on President Biden's SEC Chair, Gary Gensler, who just took office on April 17. (It should be noted, however, that the case described below was settled by the SEC after he took office.) With that as a backdrop, consider the press release and order that the SEC released on June 29 against Neovest ...
