Following on from the complaint I made to the FCA (UK equivalent to the SEC) and the comment from u/Mowgli229, I wrote to them again asking them to pass on the facts they uncovered to the SEC

They replied:

> Will the FCA be sharing the details of this matter with the SEC? **

> I can confirm that we have a Memorandum of Understanding with the SEC which allows us to share information between our organisations. Whilst we can share information between our organisations with a view to assisting us both undertake our roles, we are unable to share information with them on your behalf.

to which I have replied

> You have, by your own account, information that demonstrates that UK brokers were instructed to treat the corporate action as a stock split, and not a stock dividend. You have information that Gamestop announced and filed a stock dividend. You therefore have evidence that the DTCC has acted in error in this matter. I am not wanting you to pass information on to them on my behalf - I am wanting you to share the evidence that you have that an illegal action has occurred so that they investigate and take appropriate action.

> Put differently, I would like you to share the information on this case that you have uncovered to assist them undertake their role as regulator.

> This is like saying "yes, I see that you have evidence of murder, and we confirm that murder occurred, but the murderer is American and we don't have jurisdiction. And we are not going to contact the authorities on your behalf, even though we've confirmed its murder ourselves". I fail to understand the legal, moral or ethical stance you're taking here.

> I appreciate I can pass the information on myself, but we both know that coming from you it will have more impact than coming from me.

It will be interesting to see what reply I get to this. And yes, I have passed on the information myself to the SEC too.
