Normal GME: volume goes down stonk goes down. Volume goes up, stonk goes up.

Post 2021 GME: volume goes down, stonk goes down. Volume goes up, stonk goes....down?

High volumes have lead to high prices. It's what happens. Our buying overpowers their shorts and we crush them.

This is something new. It's my belief that they are now openly naked shorting (high volume, lower prices) every last share they can find a buyer for. Their entire goal is to get out of their shorts by pushing the price so incredibly low that they can buy all those puts on the 21st/28th. They are taking the opportunity of the FED minutes to misdirect people away from the real reason.

If they can naked short enough shares all at once, and get the price to drop down into their put strike price, they will be able to close all of the naked shorts they're opening in order to drop the price to their strike, and hang the MMs out to dry.

Their old tactics were bleeding them dry. Desperate times call for desperate measures.
