If you are paying attention to world affairs (and not the propaganda surrounding them), you know that the Moscow Exchange was not open today and wont be open tomorrow...and that the Russian Central banks have been disconnected from SWIFT (for international finance). The SWIFT thing was reportedly a sanction against Russia, but... why wasn't their exchange open today? More so, why is the Moscow Exchange website COMPLETELY OFF THE INTERNET? Unreachable. (moex.com)

What if... Russia knows that the MO ASS is coming this week and doesn't want to be connected to SWIFT when the shit hits the fan and GameStop squizze starts?

None of this makes much sense, but I would think that having your central bank isolated during a global financial system meltdown isn't the worst idea ever?
