

Title: I understand this is a GME subreddit, but doesn't Ryan Cohen's recent $150 million bet on this specific over-shorted stock confirm BoBBY is not just another mass media distraction? RC's actions like this should be taken far more seriously than we currently do with his individual tweets

What if BoBBY is possibly very unique in some way and/or directly connected to GME? There easily could have been forum sliding attacks for the few genuine BoBBY DD posts that didn't get deleted, or great posts may have gotten deleted entirely due to our current GME-only rule.

If it were anyone else besides RC dropping $150 million into BoBBY, I wouldn't care at all. But this is the fucking chairman of the board of GameStop, and he made it clear he's HODLing GME, but he proceeded to drop a $150 million bet on BoBBY and has had multiple tweets regarding BoBBY several times.

If BoBBY is proven to be directly connected in some way to GME, shouldn't it be considered to be allowed for discussion?

We are also currently witnessing a massive coordinated FUD attack on BoBBY from mass media, how often do we see that with ayyemcee? Very rarely compared to the constant barrage of MM GME FUD. They seemed to solely attack GME in this way, but now they're also firing these direct and brutal shots at BoBBY to deter investors, unlike anything we've seen other than with GME.

Imagine if RC had tweeted some shit like "Just dropped $150 million on a bet that BoBBY will go up 400% by 2023". That's practically what the reveal of his $60 and $80 BoBBY calls was and this was when the stock was when BoBBY was only $15! I'd bet $150 million that a tweet like that would have made more of us take it seriously and dig deeper into BoBBY and its potential significance related to GME.

I believe RC's actions, like $150 million bets, are what we should take most seriously... or at least more seriously than we take his tweets.

When we are constantly desperately trying to find hidden meaning and things to dig deeper into from RC tweets, he's practically screaming at us (with a $150 million bet) to ask ourselves why he may have chosen BoBBY to be one of the only 3 stocks he owns. Let alone put up $150 million which demonstrates his insanely high confidence that BoBBY specifically is going to quadruple by 2023.

To be clear, I AM NOT saying that it's guaranteed for his calls to work out and maybe BoBBY never reaches $60 or even ends up crashing under $15 again.

But I AM pointing out how we obsess over his tweets on the GME subreddits and try to find out how each one could be connected to GME or the manipulation that affects GME. And yet do we not do the same for RC's actions? Let alone a $150 million dollar bet on a specific overshorted stock? Why would we not consider allowing it in the subreddit, to a degree, and digging deeper like we have been tirelessly doing with GME?

I don't believe he can legally/safely tweet about his BoBBY calls without risking being sued for manipulation or some shit, but he has tweeted about BoBBY in other ways.

So out of all other over-shorted stocks to choose from, there might just be something really unique about BoBBY other than the buybuybaby angle or simply a way RC can legally profit off moa$$$. And since he ONLY OWNS 2 OTHER STOCKS! (GME and Apple), this is even more significant and a very unique calculated decision for him to choose BoBBY specifically.

Could it really be another angle to counter the on-going GME price manipulation via swaps?

So yeah, I wouldn't be surprised if the few BoBBY DD posts were suppressed via forum sliding so that we stay in line with solely GME and not find other angles to counter the manipulation via swaps.

And as I said, the media's treatment and strong attacks/FUD about BoBBY is interestingly VERY similar to GME, unlike what we have seen for ayyemcee and the other proven distraction "meme" stocks that media pedals.

that's not all confirmation that it's not just another distraction or typical overshorted "meme" stock the media is trying to pump'n'dump, then I don't know what is.
