So, Etoro labour the point about being regulated by the FCA (Which means jack as any liable claim would max out at £1m). Does that mean from a UK investor perspective I can pursue a complaint to the FCA about illegal naked shorting of GME (even though its happening on a US market) that would need to be investigated via the likes of Etoro who claim to be investing my money in the underlying asset but can't allow us to DRS? In effect their marketing is misleading (Investing in Stocks & Shares) and the short selling which is manipulating the market is in my opinion a fraudulent activity to fleece the retail investor. To me that means a pincer movement can be made... SEC / DOJ investigating Shitadel in the US (If they ever get their arses into gear) whilst the FCA investigate shady brokers outside of the US jurisdiction.... just thinking out loud....
