I cannot post this in Superstonk, so if somebody could share it please that would be great thanks.

A small rant but here goes.

Instead it is a bunch of retail investors laughing and celebrating at the loss that OTHER retail investors have occurred. You can make any bias you want but the fact remains that Ryan Cohen new retail was behind BBBY and that he unloaded his position. We cannot know his reasons, wether he has a plan or that he simply lost faith in BBBY. All I know is that the filing was released AH the day before thousands up thousands of uncovered calls were about to expire ITM and has most probably ruined the squeeze. Most retail investors cannot exit their positions AH and will get hit the hardest. How about instead of brigading them (alot who are also GME holders) perhaps feel some sympathy? Imagine if it was the other way round? After all you are all on the same side.
