EDIT: Appears to be a nod towards Apple using javascript to create smooth high-res animation with scrolling on their site. /u/CunilDingus and /u/WeirdStroopwafel point it out below.

I was combing through the nft.gamestop.com source code and I came across an interesting variable naming convention.

Source Code

The array of images used for the NFT scrolling spin animation is named "AirpodsArray". This is a teaser site after all. So they would comb through the code themselves to make sure the code the devs copy and pasted from stackoverflow doesn't have the same variable names. Why would they use the name of another leading tech companies product? I decided to go look into the history of Airpods and just read what the "Cultural impact" section from Wikipedia:

Airpods Wikipedia

The parallels between GME and Airpods are quite similar. GME investors have been mocked since January. It's a cultural phenomenon, just read the SEC report. MSM labelled GME a "meme" stock along with the entire movement being meme driven. The only part that doesn't have a parallel yet is being a status symbol. If you go and read more of the Wikipedia page it also says that Airpods became A's most popular accessory within 2 years. An initially mocked product becoming the biggest product within 2 years... I would not be surprised if GME's biggest product in the next 2 years is their NFT marketplace.

I'm all for other theories, but what I do know is that the naming is intentional.
