Greetings, apes. Long time lurker here, first time poster. I saw a post that u/Ginger_Libra shared about finding a trust that would allow us to defer capital gains for centuries and do more good works with those dollars. I want to focus on affordable housing.

I had a call with her attorney, Dr. Gina, and I am going forward with it. I really liked the attorney and it sounds like it's going to save me some business taxes too. My CPA was on the phone and Gina explained everything so he was happy. A lot of it may have been over my head.

It also seems like it takes some time to move the shares from a brokerage to ComputerShare or from Computer Share to Computer Share account, so I'm getting started now.

I'm surprised this trust and foundation hasn't gotten more interest, especially with all the good works people are talking about doing.

I'm most excited about the private family foundation that is a 501c3. From what I understand, you can normally only donate 30% of your income to charity, but with this trust, if I wanted to I can donate as much as I want to charity. You can also get grants....so other foundations could give my private family foundation grants. I want to build affordable housing. I'd love to be able to offer people to pay 25% of their income towards rent, and then gift them the house with all the cash after 5 years. I hope I can make that pencil, because I'd love to see people's face. That's my post GME plan. It's really needed in my neck of the woods.

I'm not an expert, and I think I'm saying this right but the main trust defers capital gains for three generations. They are deferred like a 401k for centuries but you can use the gains in your life time for other investments.

I caught one of Ginger's posts about it and they don't seem to get as much attention as I would think they would. Maybe I'm wearing the tin foil hat too much, but is this powerful tool of the wealthy one more thing they don't want us to know about? Apparently President Biden has one of these trusts.

Anyway. I'm just excited to get going on my family foundation and wanted to share. I can't wait to see all the good things we are going to do.
