If gabe plotkin lost 6.8b dollars from closing positions in January, that could have been around 40m shares at a loss of about $170 per share, which coincides with him saying he closed his entire position Jan 26. The fintel data shows 61m shares short Jan 15 and then 21m short on Jan 29.

Now that's still a lot short but how do we know for sure there's a naked short position and they haven't already closed the majority of the shorts as the massive 6.8b dollars does seem to correspond to the number of shares that were reportedly covered.

I've read all the dd and been convinced multiple times, but I want to be cautious and ask how do we know?

Bullish regardless, because the long term value in GameStop is still an infinity rocket ■
