DRS in my opinion is definitely the best thing shareholders can do for a company they love, while also protecting their investment and preventing their own shares being used against them.

TLDR: beginning is a rant about meaningful engagement with GameStop's social media. Main post is about the 90+ companies like cashapp, revolut, stake and moneylion using drivewealth as their broker. It's likely say technologies will be used by revolut and other companies that are using drivewealth to handle any voting for the AGM. Robinhood recently bought say technologies...

Social media rant:

Something that gets mentioned but I feel it's not pushed enough is to also support GameStop's social media. If you're a gamer or are interested in the products provided by GameStop then interact with their social media. Like their posts, share their content and even post pictures of your purchases with honest reviews of your shopping experience and honest reviews for their in house brands like atrix.

All interactions with their social media should be focused on the products and services they offer instead of stonk talk. Meaningful and honest engagement with their social media is exactly what helps GameStop more as a company then often nonsensical stonk talk. I've included links to their social media below. Please subscribe, like, generate and share GameStop content, interact with their posts by focusing on the content/product info shared and your genuine personal experience with them. We love the company and we can do a lot to support its main business function.

The more engagement with their posts the better. Look at how we got ken Griffin crime into Google search rankings.

Something I've noticed recently and I'm hoping it's skills but seeing a lot of negative talk about rukizzel. I've the highest respect for the dude. He wasn't hired to pander to stock enthusiasts but I've complete respect for how he's handling it all. Dude is being as honest as he can whenever he can when it comes to the multitude of theories we throw his way.

Sorry for the rambling rant but that shit needs be a high priority for us so we can help GameStop succeed as a company.

***** Main reason for this DD *****

As the shareholder vote on the recent 8k proposal is going to be very important, thought I'd share even more reasons to DRS and this post is aimed towards the 90 different partners drivewealth are using i.e revolut, cashapp, stake and moneylion.

I'm not 100% certain on this so would appreciate some feedback on other people's experiences but during the last AGM, revolut allowed voting for shareholders through say technologies. At the time I was happy I was able to submit my vote and didn't look into it too much.

Guess who now owns say technologies after a recent acquisition for $140m..... Robin the fucking hood! I'd now equate a vote through say technologies to throwing a coin in a wishing well.

Steve Cohen's Point72 and other reasons why trading through drivewealth sucks.

Point72 venture capital has been investing in drivewealth since 2018. Drivewealth operates in 150 countries through 90 partners such as introducing brokers (revolut, stake, cashapp and moneylion) using the drivewealth api.

Investment round announcements with multiple investment partners.

2018

$21 million

2020

$56.7 million

The most recent round of funding (not lead by Point72 though they still contributed) on around the 20th of August 2021 raised $450 million from a number of investors including fidelity. Can't really say much about fidelity as their reported response to DRS is the best experience reported so far.

I would prefer more substantial proof of Point72's stake in Drivewealth than "the person said" so if anyone has a better insight, let me know.

"The person" said Point72 have 15% of drivewealth. As they're a venture capital firm, I believe they have more input on how the company shapes their business vs a standard institutional investor. Point72 led a number of the funding rounds for drivewealth.

Revolut is coming to the USA too... Recent granting of broker dealer status will have it compete with robinhood and square. Hopefully a ban on PFOF will slow any progress of these parasitic companies pretending to offer the best deal for customers.

Another fun little fact is in relation to a company called cuttone and co llc. All of drivewealth trades are sent through this LLC which essentially leaves drive wealth to submit a blank sec form 606. A form 606 is a requirement to disclose where drivewealth's trades are being routed. Oh guess who bought cuttone and co.... Drivewealth!!?? So they route the PFOF trades through cuttone and co LLC and are off the hook for the standard disclosures other brokers like fidelity and IBKR submit annually.

Drivewealth is also a not held broker so I don't believe they are under any obligation to immediately purchase your shares in the market once you place your order. They can accept it and tell you you have your share but can actually place the order at a time of their choosing. Could do with confirmation on this if any wrinkled brains could chime in, I'll update.
