Alright so all this art of war, big plan stuff is starting to click for my squishy-stress-ball of a brain. I got together with Captain Hindsight to ask myself:

As an executive making BANK and at big name corporate company. How would I be enticed to take a job with a dying brick and mortar retail store?

The easy answer is a shit Ton of money.

The other answer involves a vision that you want to work for that promises rewards better than you currently receive. We are going to review this portion by making the assumption that the answer is the Metaverse due to RCs tweet that "God Bless GMerica and No Overpaid Execs in the Metaverse". GMerica is the Metaverse, no overpaid executives explains the vision. First we must ask HOW and then WHY.

How are there no overpaid executives?

- people agreeing to contribute value to the company in return for shares not large cash salaries in the millions and millions
- these people understand that they will be paid a living wage and then the real earnings will come from the mass amount of stock or shares owned and it's value

So people working for something they believe in. Half the battle. This plan doesn't work in the current market environment with the bad actors at play, dummy places CEOs, Hedgefund bullies and paid of regulators.

Currently, the system does allow for the fair valuation of companies set by what the company provides to the American people. The current system does not allow retail to influence price discovery. The current system is not ideal for how RC wants executives to get paid. This needs to be fixed for RCs plan to work.

Because we know that RC has executives working for 60% of their earnings in shares. And with the push to OWN shares. With the dollar inflating, why even sell. Hold a share of something that will produce value over time and rise in price.

In the metaverse there must be something that solves these two problems:

1. Fair valuation of companies or real price action in the stock market
2. Easier way to utilize your shares as collateral

So what could that look like?

Option A. Break the market but don't change the system, restart after the regulators remove the bad actors and try to help rebuild the current system.

Option B. Break the market and offer an alternative solution or system, expose the broken system while offering an enticing new system that has a pretty large community to start.

I'm gonna assume that RC is choosing option B. Break markets and create a new American system of how to value companies that produce value for society. In turn he will also create a way for companies to compensate their Star employees differently that should allow for the ability to pay frontline workers differently as well.

Tons of changes coming. This man is going full Florida Man on these Wall Street suit munchers. Kenny being from Chicago is the cherry on top, he's an hour behind still with catching on to what's happening.
