I've been following the Evergrande's situation for few days and have a question about a hypothetical situation. Please don't take me for spreading FUD. I'm genuinely curious about the potential outcome because my knowledge in financial market is still limited but a possible theory is ringing in my head.

If Evergrande declares bankrupt, there's a potential ripple effect to US stock market, right? If so, it could possibly cause a massive failure in US stock market, correct? If both situations are true, wouldn't it give SHF unlimited ammo in creating a huge pool of shorted/naked shorted shares in multiple companies that are within "cellar boxing" range? If the third point is true, wouldn't it mean SHF can generate unlimited money for a however long the "cellar boxing" period is to further disrupt the price of GME?

Again, I'm just genuinely curious because I just don't know enough about stock market, and not necessarily trying to create a FUD. Please let me know if this is my imagination running wild or if I actually did gain some wrinkles and made a connection.
