Hello all,

After some analysis, I knew GameStop was in free fall after $250. I held because of gut feeling and brain washed behavior.

Tomorrow at opening, I am selling every GME share I own. I plan on rebuying all shares after it drops to my comfort level as I am still bullish.

I don't want to, my analysis says I should, and I have disregarded my math too long.

Worst case scenario is stock goes up and I keep a hefty pile of change. I am still positive in 2021 because of popcorn mania.

Best case scenario is I rebuy the same amount of shares and keep a good amount of money after.

Doing it at around ~$120. I might get burned, but I don't mind as I do kind of need the money right now. To all those who say "short it", well here I go!

Regardless, if I don't buy back short term, once my wife and I finish grad school, I will continue investing in the company as I am bullish long term. By then, I won't be stressed about grad school broke-ness. God speed, Spider-Man. ■

I will return (if I'm not banned), with results. If I'm wrong, L.
