

Title: Opinion: "Writers" - should show their holdings in % terms at the foot of an article, not just some no position either long or short. Show me what you got...then I can make an educated decision on whether I trust your "Journalism".

Does the disclaimer at the end of articles full of absolute waffle not bother anyone else? GME or otherwise, writing or on TV. Writers and TV hosts should give a full disclaimer of what they own, in what percentage of their portfolio. As that has a big bearing on how valid their waffle is.

Journalism should inform.

What the MSM is, is a bunch of copy writers for hire. Copy writers persuade, not inform.

There's a pretty big difference. Some might say it's manipulation.

99% of these "writers" (sorry, I have no source for that specific percentage at time of writing...), don't have any credentials to write about markets, let alone have an opinion.
