I'm not quite at the 12 month mark, so I'm an early February ape...which means the "big event" had already happened when I came to WSB to review what had happened. I'm going to fill you all in on what I've learned in the last year.

First, if "they" could stop this, they already would have. They can't. MOASS is inevitable. Their only hope is to delay it indefinitely.

Second, the action since Q3 has been "different" since the first half of the year, and even more "different" in Q4...and becoming more violent. It reeks of desperation. I think we're close, but I'm patient... I'll wait until it happens. That's it. Forever if necessary.

If you look at yesterday's fake news story about NFT marketplace, ask yourself a question... Who would expect the WSJ to release a fake story? Were they trying to build a fake narrative about insider trading? Were they trying to get GME to tip their hand on NFT thing? Were they hiding the fact that they need to buy shares for this month's OTM PUTS to kick the can down the road further? The answer isn't important... The fact that they NEEDED to do it shows desperation.

I know you're all mad that the SEC appears to be asleep at the wheel, but are they? If the SEC wasn't going to prosecute the bad actors... Why the desperate WSJ thing? I am not assuming they're working to bury this. I'm assuming that they're going to get stuck fixing the biggest shit sandwich this country has ever seen, and will be filing 1000s of racketeering/RICO cases against the bad actors... And, that takes time. The odd updates to rules seem pretty focused on forcing bad actors to either pay up their debts or be prosecuted.

Lastly, assume that this problem is bigger than one stock... Because it is. If the market implodes and only DFV gets paid, the market survives largely unscathed and continues onward. We're millions of people now with almost enough knowledge for a Series 7... We don't get that in a day. A week.

We get that by being in this fucker for a year. Exposing all the zombie stocks, option games, FTDs... All shit nearly none of us knew existed a year ago.

The heroes journey is almost complete. It may not seem like it, but we've already won. The final cut scene is playing... And it's not the normal hold the head of the enemy on a pile of bodies. Instead, it's a bunch of people in battle armor still ready to fight... Realizing that only friendlies are still around them.

See you on the moon.
