So, I've seen some posts that above 510, the open market ask was ~450K.

If this is the case, it's not f.ckry to have a trading halt. With such a big spread, it sounds like a normal fail-save halt.

All GME DRS'd shares is of course great, but they don't participate in the open market.

For the price to go up, without a computerized halt, I guess there need's to be some ask within boundaries.

So maybe, if you are a XXX Gamestop holder, although it hurts, and if you really want to, set some sell limit orders for single shares ladderred on the order-book. So to prevent that an automatic trading halt systems intervenes with inevitable.

Not financial advise, i ate yellow crayons before this post.
