I deleted my old account because I didn't think I had anything else to contribute DD wise and that it wouldn't matter if I made a new acc with no karma. Then shit started to get more interesting with my Vanguard fuckery. So I'm sharing it here hoping it won't get removed and that people can see what a dry run at MOASS might look like when it comes to DRS and why the anti-DRS FUD is projected Fear, Uncertainty, and Doubt. I won't and can't advise others on what to do financially. I enjoy sharing information with people so they can make their own choices with that information and sharing what choices I've made and why.

Did it hurt? When I was Dragon deez purple Balls across your precious shorts?

Like many other apes I knew about DRS well before I made my first transfer. I wasn't against it I just didn't know enough about it to feel confident moving my GME over to ComputerShare when I'd never heard of it before. I now have 99% of my GME at CS and feel more confident my investment is secure than I have since I bought my first .X

I was convinced by a trusted ape that DRS was the most effective way to protect yourself. More than choosing "trustworthy" brokers, more than diversifying brokers and dividing shares to different accounts, more than any other trick in the book. If insiders DRS all their company holdings then I wasn't going to trust Street Name shares with the majority of my holdings either. I didn't like Vanguard so I was sending all but X shares I held there to ComputerShare. The more they delayed the less I committed to holding there. After hearing "1-2 weeks" for three weeks I said fuck you very much and move my shares back to Fidelity.

Due to gross incompetence and corruption I was left with -XX shares in a cash account. After a month of silence- no call back to make a FINRA complaint "in a few days" and no replies to my emails concerning the abundance of problems I was having with them. After no response to trying to resolve the problem they cause I got this email:

<https://preview.redd.it/rpgofvt2l0d81.png?width=1154&format=png&auto=webp&s=a9b26b68c50b6185e1b14dc5e09a835c60d6cda5>

Now just because you delivered a package to me you weren't supposed to doesn't mean you get to come into my house without authorization or forewarning and "reclaim" (thieve) that package. But they casually admitted in writing to attempting to do exactly that and couldn't because I don't use the locks on my door as decorations.

Focus on the red highlight. In that email they fortify the argument for DRS by stating clearly that:

1. The XX GME shares transferred to ComputerShare are the "valid" shares.
2. That they feel so entitled to 'Street Name' shares that even if they're held at another brokerage they believe that can reach right in and take them from you with no consequence so long as they don't call their thieving what it is.

I told them that I had no confidence in their ability to make a simple transaction without fucking it up (because they fuk'd up 8/10 transactions) so any further transaction would have to happen with a regulating body overseeing the process. Literally- "I will return the shares. Reply to my FINRA complaint to make it happen." They did not reply to my complaint and instead put my account in margin without authorization or talking to me about it beforehand. Putting me in margin leaves me with a $25 dollar fee so they're literally trying to make me pay for their mistake instead of communicating with FINRA. (Eventually they responded to my FINRA complaint well after the deadline they were given. They cherry picked phone calls and blamed me for it when I asked them clearly if I could transfer to Fidelity without problem and they told me "Yes there won't be a problem.")

The key thing here is that they stated themselves that the shares held in my name at ComputerShare are the "*valid*" shares. The most compelling piece here though? That they didn't even ***attempt*** to "reclaim" my CS shares. I emailed CS and explicitly asked if there was a record of them trying to. Vanguard tried pulling from Fid without consent **then** emailed me to try and get consent after the fact. CS was laying there not even having my account for it set up yet let alone having the chance to put it into any kind of lockdown mode. The most efficient thing to do would've been to try and pull the other transfer back. But they still focused on getting the Fidelity shares and when they realized they'd have to contact FINRA before they could get that transfer back they chose to put my account into margin. It's like being given two options to remedy the problem you caused and being so afraid of the second option you whip out a third choice that was never mentioned and do that instead.

DRS is a tiger. Even if it's laying there sleeping anyone with smooth for brains knows to respect it unless you want your face ripped off. **DRS has all the face ripping capabilities you're looking for when it comes to protecting your prized GME share-babies.** Make would be thieves fear reaching their hand in to take what they didn't pay for. Street Name or DRS- you paid for it. But do you own it? Do you have that ownership documented in writing?

If you hold shares at Fidelity or Vanguard the answer is no. You do not own your shares. Vanguard used to offer the option to DRS but removed it. Fidelity could offer DRS knowing it's in high demand but they don't. They know what's in their best interest and choose Street Name. After months of research I chose to act in my own best interest and to put my finances first so I choose to DRS.

Wallstreet looks out for their own best interest first and foremost. So I do the same. I protect my investment and wait. We won't know what the final step is until we cross the finish line so I don't put any weight on DRS numbers for now because I think it's a pressure point that can be used for massive psy-ops FUDkery. Instability is an enemy of longevity and they will try until the bitter end to knock you off balance to gain an advantage. Expect the hits, plant your feet, and dodge the bullshit.

We're playing chess. They think five moves ahead of our smartest apes at any point because they have the full picture and all the data they need to be able to think so far ahead. We don't know how long it's going to take and we don't need to. If you use your time wisely then you can improve yourself and become a stronger opponent to corruption. Be the Boss on hard mode that keeps leveling up and healing itself during battle.

They made the mistake of underestimating us and have since corrected their initial folly. They acted foolishly out of emotion. Get excited, enjoy life, get angry at injustice, but do not let emotions cloud your judgement and don't underestimate them. They are not fools just like we are not fools. As smart as everyone in this game is we are all capable of acting foolishly so practice meditating, mindfulness, visualization, put energy into improving yourself, set up every tiny detail you need post MoAss to secure your wealth (what kind of lawyer do you need and multiple options to call up so you can run down the list, what trust funds are you setting up and for who, what NDAs do you want, what forms do you have to fill out and submit once you take profit?), get coping skills (DBT, CBT) to manage the extreme emotions that will come no matter how Zen the ape. Prepare yourself and don't allow room for emotional hits. "This date was hyped with god tier data and all it did was the Cupid Shuffle until AH. Now I'm disappointed and sad because I needed this money months ago" type shit.

I'm committed to this thing and riding it out as long as I have to. DRS is going to get me as far as I plan on going. If I try and ride Street Name out to my floor I'll lose massive amounts of profit. I am in this for the money then the change. I am taking profits and I'm not going to let brokers like Vanguard take those from me because their T&C's said they could fuck with *my* money. They fear DRS. They fear informed retail investors who protect our investments. Who are engaging in the market and making money when they specifically rigged the game to siphon our money. They're scared of us.
