I see GameStop plummeting....my unrealized losses nearing the ten thousands, and wonder to myself...why don't I feel anything? Why am I not sick to my stomach? Why am I Zen like a monk on the peak of Mount Everest? Like Thanos in his garden at the end of Avengers: Infinity War?

Then I remember, there's been no information that disproves the moass thesis and talking heads on the news who are bought and paid for by big money with no regard for retail are suddenly trying to help us by focusing on one stonk (GME) and begging for people to sell and give it up?
While the entire market sinks like the titanic?

I then remember the stonk plummeting from $500 to $40 and back up to $320 a month later. I remember the constant glitches that don't appear for any other stonk.

This is my generations version of world war 2. Although not having to suffer the horrors of war (thankfully) I compare the situation we are in now as paratroopers about to drop into Germany and take over, turn the tide of the war as we get closer to enemy lines and our inevitable victory, the flak increases. Evil won't go down without a fight. The stonk drops. But I have no fear. I quoted this in a previous post, but I must use it again:

As the great Frederick Douglass said.

"Greatness does not come on flowery beds of ease to any people. We must fight to win the prize. No people to whom liberty is given, can hold it as firmly and wear it as grandly as those who wrench liberty from the iron hand of the tyrant."

And with that, I will fly through the flak valiantly and BUY. DRS. HOLD.

Fighting for financial freedom, we will prevail.
