I've been thinking it would be great to get off Reddit for a while and do some practice for what's to come. Because remember, In infinity none can hear you scream. When the mother of all events occurs you will probably be all alone atleast in the beginning.

It's you and the ticker. The price starts to skyrocket. Checks position. Millions. Halt 69 for the day. Trading resumes. A big fucking dip. Checks position again. Half the value gone in a matter of hours. Sweating and head starts spinning. What's happening? Apes selling? Am I the only one left holding now? Goes to Gangnam style. Shills/bots flooding it "I GOT LUCKY AND MANAGED TO SELL AT THE TOP!!". Panic/anxiety. Is this it? Should I also sell? No way.

Because deep inside we all in here know that we can take whatever the fucking price for our shares. Think about the journey so far. The best time of my life I would say. Because once I decide to hit that sell button the journey ends. It's over. It won't ever be the same again.

I'm not interested in making this a "the time of my life" moment. I'm holding to make the rest of my life the time of my life.

I wanna see what's on the other side of this. Is there a chance I might see millions go up in smoke that I could've had if I sold? Maybe. But then I can proudly say to myself that I gave it everything and happily continue my life as usual. But there's also a big chance that I will end up with a net worth of go fuck yourself, exposing corruption, and all of a sudden be in a position able to help people.

Last but not least I wanna find out if the DD was right and there's literally only one way to find out.
