I'm not smart, but I'm not dumb. I have no fancy graphs, charts, or Doritos to back this hype train of thought. I do not claim to be a GME expert, but have made observations.

They continue dropping the price and I can afford to buy more for less.

The more I buy, the lower the float.

The lower the float, the closer to MOASS.

The lower all stocks are going, the lower the value/liquidity.

The lower the value/liquidity, the less banks loan.

Less banks loan, the higher chance of Marge calling, because banks will always put their balance sheets first.

So although this hurts now, I feel like this is the way. Outside forces will help trigger the dominoes.

None of us are getting out. We've been in too long and some of us are seeing big losses. Apes hold strong, because you don't lose money unless you sell. So it dips and I buy. I hold because I have losses.

If this stock goes up or down, APES WIN!!

Wrinkle brains, does that make sense? It seems obvious to me and I got one of them college degrees. But it also seems too obvious.
