I currently hold 20 shares via eToro, one of the primary retail brokerage companies in Europe and outside of the US. As far as I'm aware, they do not allow for DRS but I'm increasingly conscious that I would like to own my shares. I don't have a ton of faith in eToro allowing free trading, sales and purchases, when the moment of truth finally arrives. This was evident during the sneeze when, like many other brokerages, they turned off the 'buy' button. I have no doubt they would impede GME share trading when we reach the moment we've all been waiting for.

Is it advisable to continue to hold with eToro and accept the risk of not being able to close my positions, or should I buy with IBKR, a different brokerage, which allows DRS via Computer Share?

I'm super keen to get on the DRS train but I absolutely don't want to sell my shares. Does anyone know how to DRS from eToro without selling and re-buying on a different brokerage, one that allows you to DRS? I don't think it can be done but thought I'd crowd source some wisdom.

Is anyone else in the same boat and if so, have you had any thoughts similar to what I've outlined above?

Thanks in advance!
