Getting tired of the cycle of hype posts speculating dates and/or catalysts for "a sudden price spike into 6 or 7 digits" and then all the FUD when speculation turns out to be speculation. People want to make predictions so that in the event they are right, they get to claim they are a wizard or some shit, cool, I don't care.

I am invested in GME for the deep fucking value(double entendre intended). I believe the company is transitioning into a leading blockchain tech company and I am getting to invest early. "Price Spike? If it happens, cool. If it doesn't happen, oh well. It's not why I invested. I enjoy reading all the different theories on potential catalysts and shit but that's it. I find them interesting but I am not disappointed when they don't come true.

As the title says, this is not financial advice. Just figured I share my thought processes and how I am enjoy the ride.
