I was looking at all my families cost basis for Gamestop and they don't seem right. Primarily, there is no way they bought the original shares at those prices. But before I dispute that, can someone tell me how the cost basis should appear with the additional shares? Shouldn't they be at zero? And the date of the acquired be 7/22/22? If they should be at zero, shouldn't it average down your total cost basis? If it shouldn't be at zero, shouldn't the price at least match the price of the split? (which I can't find anywhere?)
