ok, I work for FINRA, so let's get this straight.

RC had access to non-public material information because he has been meeting with the board of directors over at BBBY. We all know this. He sent a rather poignant letter many moons ago. He even advised the share buyback. He also owns a substantial portion of that company in common stock. The options do not count towards his share count.

In my professional opinion, and yes, it counts, because if this were ever to land in my arb room, I'd determine the same:

RC is an insider at BBBY. That is why they submitted a form 144 and 13f to cover their bases.

Done, now move on people.

MODS, happy to verify if needed u/platinumsparkles can confirm my identity and position.
