

Title: Their goal is likely two-fold: Prevent 'typical' investors from jumping in, while putting off the inevitable for as long as possible so they can move their cash offshore.

This WSJ article and the timing of it coming out right before (same time) as a 30% run-up in price after hours is just step 1, keep all the old school or uninformed off the scent as long as possible. Since they can't win to keep their hedge funds, etc open, the next best thing they can do is keep it going as long as possible and offshore cash and transfer funds elsewhere so they have a parachute when this finally comes tumbling down. No one gets arrested from these deals, watch the Big 'not tall' movie for just one example.

The pressure needs to stay on if not increase.

tl;dr: Buy, hold, DRS. This is not financial advice. I am xxx hodler 100% in GME, my DD tells me this is the best.

Sorry for the words, English is not my first language, Ape is.
