Brokerages have maximums on limit sell orders. On one of them for example, you cannot sell a share for more than 500% of its last price.

It would therefore be most beneficial to never create a sell limit order unless the current price is truly at the GME Floor numbers, right?

Similarly, would it be unwise to create a market sell order before Floor prices because someone may have a limit buy in place far lower than what it should be?

So literally hold until we see phone numbers, then keep hodling some more. **■■■**
