I believe we won't see any type of splividend until next year, at least until the nft marketplace is established and has verifiable success in terms of users and revenue streams. At the point where marketplace uptake is reaching its tipping point of exponential growth and uptake GameStop will announce its plan to return the favour to it's investors as which point we will truly see who is frolicking naked in the waves. The stock price will grow more and more volatile and start gaining fast and because there is already a growing interest in the nft marketplace people will hear about it and FOMO in, causing the smaller shf to burst at the seams. Apes will watch on as they receive their gold, safe in the knowledge that they have at least drsd some shares, as the mayhem truly unfolds. A successful marketplace combined with a splividend is the dynamite that is gonna blow the doors off the 21st century, providing the coup de grace to the old ways.

I really see no other way to make people truly notice other than this way. The alternative is that the marketplace goes live, generates some interest in the first month amongst the few that still don't believe nfts are a scam, and they announce a splividend. Your average person is not going to take notice and this does not help RC and co. push the company forward effectively, despite what people say. All they will see is another meme stock craze that is doomed to fail. There's a bigger game at play here for RC than apes getting their tendies and he has to count on a logical strategy that is rooted in reality. Any potentially market/bank breaking move is going to be done at a time that suits him and his objectives. They have announced simply to be prepared and to reassure their investors that they are the same team and there is a plan, so let the plan unfold.

I hope this doesn't come off as pessimistic because I wake up every morning jacked to the tits that I'm part of such a momentous movement like this. The whole journey has changed me as a person for the better and I love all of you madlads. I'm just gonna continue chilling and living the best life that I can in the knowledge that great things are coming. Until tomorrow's tomorrow comes let's enjoy today.
