

Title: I don't feel like retyping this, but it is our responsibility knowing what we know to teach people and inform them. We let that slip away in favor of bullshit, drama, petty arguments (distractions). We need to do better. ■■■■

Author: disoriented_llama

Created 2022-05-30 23:53:16 UTC

Permalink: /r/TheGloryHodl/comments/v1d72f/i_dont_feel_like_retyping_this_but_it_is_our/

Url: <https://i.redd.it/awa7lr69bp291.jpg>

Knotty_Llama 🙌🙌🙌🙌 @... · 1h ...

I took a walk into r/GMEJungle today and was frankly disgusted at the level of useless posts and bullshit social climbing I saw there. What the fuck has happened to the apes? The learning? Way too many people get caught up in the social part and totally forget to learn shit. 🤔

Llama Today at 6:43 PM

Please share if you feel so inclined... Why is nobody pushing learning and research anymore? That worries me on a significant level. How many apes have actually read the DD? How many are blindly following sentiment instead of following the cardinal rule from way back when—dyor. I have been here since before Superstonk and I am sorry, but the lack of education and collaborative learning is disturbing. This and many other subs have Cohencidentally fallen prey to the same stuff. I'm so disappointed in mods across the board. This started as a group of people who wanted to learn and it has become unrecognizable. Research and information needs to be at the forefront and nothing anyone does can "force" a squeeze. Instead of spending time posting about stuff too many people don't understand, we need to get back to education, laughter, and collaboration.

3

1

12

