Just for fun because AI is both \*Wholesome\* and \*Awesome\*.

Welcome to anyone reading these threads and visiting from the various pixel communities. You are welcome here. Please have a look around and ask all the questions you like.

Who am I? Just some rando who walked up out of the crowd. Feel free to ignore me and explore on your own.

Nobody here will ever tell you directly what to do with your money. We are a community of individuals that have all come to our own conclusions. Non of this is legally to be considered financial advice.

I strongly encourage you to read our collections of DD (Due Diligence) posts and links to libraries.

The basic premise behind GME is several layers deep.

1) GameStop is an amazing company that is being transformed by Ryan Cohen in awesome ways.

2) We here on Reddit are all individual investors who have read and watched the DD and have come to our own conclusions. There are somewhere between ~150,000(minimum) and ~500,000(half a million) individual investors just on Reddit representing Millions more individual investors around the world. There are many other GME communities on Reddit and on most other major social media platforms.

3) The world financial system is \*more corrupt\* than we imagined. It seems that every rock we turn over is crawling with filth on the underside. Sometimes the rock itself turns out to be made from poo. We have been repeatedly both dismayed and displeased by these discoveries. There \*do\* appear to be some very real and very bad actors in our world.

4) In many cases the financial MSM (Main Stream Media) \*are owned and operated\* by Hedgefunds. Take for example the Motley fool. They are \*owned and operated directly by a Hedgefund\* that is likely on the other side of the GME trade. The same is true of many bigger outlets CNBC, Jim Cramer = Citadel. AOL, Yahoo = Apollo Finance, the list goes on and on. They promote their own trades.

5) The markets are all about managing risk. And if millions of individuals have read and watched this DD and come to similar conclusions. There is a good possibility that we are on to something that the MSM (Corporate owned Media) and establishment do not want getting out.

And that's just it. \*What if? What if the GME Apes are right?\* And if that's the case, and DRS of GME through Computershare \*is\* the way to send this rocket ■ into outer space. I would consider DRS'ing at least one share of GME (to start) to be a very reasonable risk management strategy. Buy, DRS, & HODL (Hold on for dear life)

The fastest and easiest way to start learning about what is going on on Wall Street is to watch some movies and start reading the DD. I'm happy to start off with a quick video list for anyone who wants it.

Start here:

The Big Short (Comedy / Educational) watch it on whatever platform you have or can find it on. (\*cough\* just google for it \*cough\*) It is \*Funny\*, packed with great information, and sets a great mood for this adventure. <https://m.imdb.com/title/tt1596363/>

Not financial advice due to excessive crayon consumption, rocket fuel fumes, mental retardation, etc...

(Variations of this mean: "Don't just trust me, do your own research.")
