

Title: Shorts have had almost 10 months to come up with a plan

Author: slimshady1226

Created 2021-10-07 00:01:24 UTC

Permalink: /r/DDintoGME/comments/q2wt88/shorts_have_had_almost_10_months_to_come_up_with/

Url: https://www.reddit.com/r/DDintoGME/comments/q2wt88/shorts_have_had_almost_10_months_to_come_up_with/

My goal with this post isn't to cause panic or for this to be taken as FUD, I just want to start a discussion.

It seems by now just about everyone is on board with DRS (myself included) and I think that's great. What I wonder / worry is if we're "too late". I understand that if the thesis is correct and shorts still haven't covered, then theoretically everything should still be fine.

But reality is this has been a months long process (almost 10 months) to get to this point where everyone is DRSing. This has given shorts SO MUCH TIME to wiggle their way out or at least minimize their losses. How? I don't have a damn clue. I just figure it makes sense that if DRS started back in January, that would have been better for retail. Now I wonder if some new rule implemented between January and now is gonna screw retail over. I just wonder if there's something that we missed and if we "ran out of time" for MOASS so to speak.

What do you apes think?