I won't even mention the details you know what I'm talking about.

Two big things just got announced. That's what we need to focus our attention on. The HBO Documentary AND the open-comment period for the SEC rule change. I'll dig up the links if you want them.

Think about all the publicity GME will get in the next week if this HBO doc kicks off (which I hope it does obviously).

Now more than ever we need to prepare a clear and concise message, to relay to the general public, that will get them asking the right questions and becoming interested in GME/Finance like all of us have this past year+.

Regardless of the bullshit drama, one thing is certain: **I am an individual investor who wants to support my favorite company using a trading system I can trust. Currently, I do not trust this system and will take the necessary steps to inform myself and push, alongside other individuals, for reforms that help elucidate the inner workings of the financial structures we rely on. And so on and so forth**. You get the gist right?

This is what's important right now. We need to amplify the Documentary and the SEC Comment-Period. People NEED to comment on this rule change. IDC what you tell them (I'm sure someone can write a template) just show them that you're here and that you're invested and that you're watching them. Buy. Hodl. DRS. **COMMENT**.
