Interested to know how much the rest of you guys have told your other halves about GME, the shenanigans, and your investments.

I'm in a position where I started off trying to get my wife to make the investments in her name as from a tax perspective it could save us, depending on how the NZ IRD look at future profits, but even the idea that she would be responsible freaked her out. So I very quickly dropped it and just did everything in my name.

Since then I have been redirecting all available pocket money/selling stuff we dont need/investment cash and whatever cash I raise from sports betting returns into GME and whilst that is normally all my domain, my wife has no idea we now have 51 GME shares. Not sure how I introduce it, but will figure it out in time I suppose. I know if I actually try and explain the shenanigans that go on in the market she would either glaze over or look at me like I am a bit unhinged.

Oh, and probably most importantly, does your wife's boyfriend know about your investments too?
